

CLOUD SEEDING UPDATE FOR MARCH 2025 FOR HIGH COUNTRY RC&D & ASSOCIATES

March 2025 came close to February for hours of operation. After a slow start to the month, storms picked up in the middle of the March and closed out like a lion at the end of the month.

Our total hours of operation for March were 316.25, bringing the year to date hours to 1318.25. March 17th was a good storm allowing operations at most sites. However, Clark County continued to struggle to get their snowpack totals up to normal. Swan Valley was also somewhat shadowed this month.

Payments were made in March to operators for snow removal for the season. They are all great to keep the snow cleaned out and the road into the seeders open. We appreciate all they do for us!

I will be attending the Weather Modification Association annual conference in Salt Lake City April 16-18, and hopefully Marty is available to attend as well. This is a good conference and we always look forward to visiting with individuals involved in cloud seeding from all over the world.

April is starting out very warm and dry. We will continue to monitor for any storms we might can possibly operate during, and hopefully get a few more hours at our highest elevation sites.
